First Dance of the Evening:

The First Dance Traditionally belongs to the bride and groom. Alternately a bride and groom may elect to only dance alone for the first portion of the song and then invite the parents to join them. This is merely a personal preference based on comfort.

Second Dance of the Evening:

The Second Dance Traditionally belongs to the bride and her father. A variation that has seen regular occurrence at weddings is the bride with her father while the groom dances with his mother.

Third Dance of the Evening:

The third dance is generally for the wedding party to join. Often a bride and groom will elect to have everyone come to the dance floor at this time.

Final Note:

The above are only suggestions based on traditional etiquette. Unfortunately traditional etiquette does not provide for issues of remarriage, stepfamilies, divorce etc. In situations such as this we suggest the bride and groom to use their values as a guideline. If in doubt, keep it simple for the first three dances. Have your traditional first dance for the bride and groom. On the second dance invite the wedding party to join. The third dance is your opportunity to invite everyone to celebrate with you. After all, A wedding dance is a celebration!

When reviewing some of these listed selections please keep in mind that these are actual bride and groom choices from over 7000 wedding dances. Some of these selections we would not recommend. For example: "Said I love you, but I lied". The title alone indicates that this would not be an appropriate selection for the bride and groom's first song. One must listen closely to the second line in the song... "But this is more than love that I feel inside." Unfortunately, as familiar as the bride and groom were with this song, their guests were not. Their guests only managed to hear: "Said I love you, but I lied". The DJ at this function helped resolve the issue by playing the song multiple times throughout the night so the guests could listen closely. Point and case: Choose songs carefully!
